All people must act with good morals in how they teach others about spirituality, or there will be great sorrow along the way. The spirit always gives people the faith to be strong, or people will cross over into the stillness of death.

In the end, it is the faculty of love one should not trust. Therefore, when one deals with a difficult set of circumstances, it is the act of something happening at the source that results in frowned-upon moral behavior. One must therefore gradually change one's actions and environment because one doesn't need to consider other people being the same as oneself. Because other people are not the same as oneself, their way of doing things must be that essential quality over there.

For a person to tolerate and act compassionately toward a wrongdoer is truly wise. Such a person recognizes the wrongdoer completely. One must try to tolerate and have compassion for any wrongdoing. That is what the heart needs most. Only a few persons seek what they think they know. I don't feel certain about it.
